

The Solution to the Decadence of British Society

As the world plunges into an abyss of immorality and decadence, people's attitudes concerning the relationship between man and women and that of the family life, has become confused and of little importance.

The Social structure through out the world is crumbling social anarchy is prevailing. Problems such as prostitution wide spread abortion sexually transmitted diseases rape, adultery, pornography, child abuse, Homosexuality have become rife. Family life in the west has been ruined and the sanctity of relations has disappeared. These are but a few of the problems that arise in any society, which has a man, made social system.

In the west no importance is given to a social system, which will organize the relationships between men and women. Social relationships are governed by the concept of freedom where every one feels free to do what ever they want. Consequently it is this very mentality, which is responsible for the chaos and degradation of western society.

There has always been much confusion regarding the role of men and women in western society. In the past women were considered inferior creatures to men to the extent that they were even compared to animals. They were placed in the same category as children and lunatics. Women were considered as mere items that men possessed; they did not have the right to own, to inherit or to divorce nothing much has changed.

Liberation and emancipation has brought about a new series of setback for women. On the one hand they have liberated from their natural protectors such as the father, husband and brother, whilst on the other hand they have become slaves of the system. Today, the honour of women is compromised in the name of freedom and liberation. Women are regarded as sexual objects, where their bodies are used as commodities to sell anything from a bar of chocolate to a car. By creating insecurity among women about their looks, the cosmetic and the diet industry have become billion dollar businesses. In the west the equality has taken the same meaning as similarity. We see man and women competing with each other to fulfil the same role, ignoring the fact that they are two different creatures possessing different natures.

Very often we see women opting to fulfil roles that are normally fulfilled by men and vice versa. This attitude has resulted in a conflict of roles where neither knows what exactly is there responsibility or what to expect from each other. In effect equality means the compromise of a women's femininity and a man's masculinity.

Right and wrong is determined by how people within a society practice that particular action, therefore what was wrong and reviled yesterday is considered right and acceptable today and what is considered to be wrong and evil today will no doubt be right and acceptable tomorrow. For example 20 years ago homosexuality was some thing abhorrent and evil to the extent that homosexuals would not dare step out of there closet, whereas today not only is it acceptable and condoned, it is encouraged and legislation has been placed to protect the rights of homosexuals. To the extent that if views are expressed against homosexuals, in a university you would be labelled homophobic and kicked out.

It no wonder that Michael 'Puff'illo feels no shame in his admission of his gay boy tendencies back at his university days and at present. It can be now be clearly seen that the very people that pass legislation are the same people that wait until it has embedded itself in society and has become acceptable by the masses before they use the same legislation they passed to protect their own nasty sexual tendencies when they come out into the open.

The only solution to man's social problems is a system that does not suffer from the same weaknesses as present man-made systems with such contradiction, disparity and limitation. This system by definition would have to be divine and not from man.

Such a system was implemented for over 1300 years and it defined the roles and duties of both man and women in a way that man and women, Muslim and Non Muslim lived in a harmonious society devoid of any confusion. It was a system that gave honour to the woman, rather than treating her as an object of mans desire. It is a system that didn't tuck the elderly into old people's homes, waiting for them to die. It was a system that promoted family life, rather than broken families, where children are brought up as honourable citizens, rather than teenage villains.
